I admittedly had some minor problem to find into the story, but the ending rendered me speechless at the same time I wanted to scream at the top of my lungs. I am glad that book

#2 is right there waiting for me! Mags McManus is your woman next door in her mid-twenties. She is happily married to her college sweetheart until her world is ripped apart when her husband dies in a tragic accident in the army. As a widow this young, she is barely functioning without her best friend and soul mate, using alcohol to numb the pain and suspending herself from the people she loves and who love her. Nightmares haunt her each and every night, deterring her from recovering. Still, her parents-in-law and her best friend Cali try everything in their might to bring her back. It takes Walker, long-time friend of Mag and Randys best friend, to bring her back to life, to help her learn to love and trust again, while he is trying to let his love for her not destroy their friendship because that's what he is supposed to be: A really good friend. Only somehow time makes Mags fall for him and slowly Mags finds her way back to happiness until her world crashes back down again, because sometimes things are just too good to be true! I loved Walker! Tattoos, muscles and a soldier of the Army as well. He is Mags rock, her only constant he is there for her along every step of her journey: From guilt to acceptance. But he is broken himself and carries a lot of guilt a terrible secret that is haunting him that he never wants to be revealed. When it actually was revealed well, it felt like a punch in the gut to me and made me question my ability to judge a character altogether! I felt for Mags the entire time, felt her despair, going along through the stages of grief right along with her. The only thing I did not like about her was her overuse of alcohol, it seemed like she was barely doing anything other than drinking and after a while it started to annoy me. Other than that, I hope she will find her happily ever after in the sequel, because she deserves it! CRASHING BACK DOWN is a wonderfully written story full of sadness, grief, but also happiness and with a much unexpected shocking ending! Make sure you have the sequel ready, because I promise you will need it after THAT ending!!
