PERFECT!Von Detra FitchMaureen Fazzini was mother to one of New York City's slickest gangster with Mob connections, Angelo Fazzini Jr. When Angelo's wife died, Maureen let Angelo believe his one year old daughter, Erin, had too. Secretly, Maureen had Erin settled in one of Ireland's convents. Then for ten years, Maureen lived in New York and planned.Nick Desmond was a former NYC vice cop. Thanks to Angelo, his father was dead and his family name was in ruins. Maureen offered him a deal. Nick would accompany her to Ireland for a year. The locals would believe he was Maureen's nephew. In truth he would be Maureen and Erin's bodyguard. At the end of the year she would give Nick all the evidence he needed to clear his father's name and put Angelo away. Once it was agreed on, Maureen faked her own death and they left. Maggie Mulligan was the local school teacher in the area of Ballybronagh, Ireland. Her brother and his family lived in the family castle, Caislen Dubh, which had recently been turned into a B&B and renamed "Mulligan Stew". Maggie preferred living in Mulligan Cottage nearby. The O'Sheas had just moved into the county and Maggie found herself attracted to sexy Nick. Romance bloomed. All was well except for the voices Nick and Maggie kept hearing. It was said that in 1783 a witch named Sinad had been overcome by sorrow due to the loss of a lass named Bronagh. Bronagh had killed herself when her love, Aidan, had married another. Sinad had set a curse upon Caislen Dubh and the Mulligan clan.***** I could not figure out a way to write that synopsis in a way that I liked. Yet I believe I got across the gist of everything without any spoilers. In Deb Stover's previous novel, Mulligan Stew, readers got the story of Bronagh and Aidan and the curse was broken. However, even though the curse was broken do not make the mistake of believing it all over. After all, setting a curse causes major consequences. When those consequences spring from the vivid imagination of Deb Stover, readers are guaranteed a spectacular story! BRAVA! *****

Kurzbeschreibung In this enchanting follow-up to Mulligan Stew, award-winning author Deb Stover returns to the sprawling Irish countryside, where just a dash of magic on an ancient isle can spark the fiery depths of love and passion. Maggie Mulligan is thrilled to be back in Ballybronagh, surrounded by her lively Irish clan. All she wants is to raise enough money to keep the local school open so she can keep her teaching job. So why is she suddenly preoccupied with the mysterious American who has come to Ballybronagh? Working undercover has taken former New York City police detective Nick Desmond to Ballybronagh, where he plans to gather enough evidence to take down his father's killer. But it isn't long before Nick feels torn between his long-held yearning for revenge and his overwhelming desire for the beautiful schoolteacher. If he isn't careful, his longing for Maggie will overtake him, generating repercussions that are far more dangerous than his original mission. Pressestimmen [Stover] keeps readers clamoring for more!
