turbulentVon FelizThis started out from a prompt requesting a Firefly fanfic--I've never seen the show "Firefly" so I didn't get hung up on similarities or fanfic-ness of this book, I simply enjoyed it. And I really really did.The story was set perfectly inside its world, with Jacqs and Zeke two flawed, wounded heroes that matched beautifully.After a strong beginning, it dragged a bit in the middle before it took upspeed again toward the end--at one point I was literally biting my nails off with tension--are they going to make it? Both? Great characters, great couple, and the ending, if a bit depressing, was just perfect.

Kurzbeschreibung Corporal Jacqs Glebov is a simple soldier who wants a bunk, decent food, and the company of other battle-hardened men and women who understand the realities of fighting. Instead, hes stuck patrolling a remote corner of the border with cadets straight out of boot camp. They dont understand him, and he sure doesnt have an ounce of respect for them. After a field promotion, Commander Zeke Waters is sent to the Candiru for some practical experience in a leadership role. Instead, Zeke falls in lust with the adamantly heterosexual Jacqs. The way Jacqs fights and the way he sees the world draws Zeke closer, even if common sense tells him to walk away. Even if they can find a way to find to reconcile their sexual differences, they are both still soldiers. The war will eventually take them away from each other unless they can find a way to escape the rules that have defined their lives.
